Security Revolving Doors Provide Networked Access Control to Sensitive Areas

INDIANAPOLIS, July 19, 2021 – Facilities requiring controlled access of authorized personnel to sensitive areas rely on dormakaba Security Revolving Doors, a practical and secure solution for any interior access point.

A secure environment demands accurate authentication of credentials when admitting authorized personnel. Security Revolving Doors provide a secure, yet transparent solution for facilities requiring authorized individual access to restricted areas. By integrating Keyscan network access control with these doors, property managers have a flexible platform that allows monitoring and controlling access to multiple openings for any number of buildings. Any facility system can be managed from anywhere through an internet connection.

Security Revolving Doors plus Keyscan network access control feature:

- End-point locking prevents trapping individuals
- Safety sensor system
- Standard version has IR sensor system
- Versions with resistance classes RC2 and WK3
- All-glass units with underfloor drive
- Optional approved emergency exit column
- Optional in-built scales with weight limits or actual weight
- Optional night closure
- Optional optical separation using SRD Vision

Security Revolving Doors may also be equipped with a contact mat, scales or dormakaba's proprietary SRD Vision detection sensor. SRD Vision is an optical separation system that accurately detects more than one person within a revolving door and prevents access and tailgating. A sophisticated sensor system in compliance with current safety standards prevents possible injury. Depending on the security requirements, options include rotating units with emergency exit function and reinforced bullet- and burglar resistant glass.

dormakaba Security Revolving Doors are designed to harmonize with traditional or modern environments to achieve architectural continuity. All models are available in a wide variety of finishes and can be arranged in any configuration to allow essential and safe passage.
